COURSE OBJECTIVES

This is a survey course in the sociology of gender. As such, the main objective of this course is to investigate the social organization of gender, especially interactional, cultural, and institutional arrangements that underlie gender inequality in American society. In the process, we will continually return to a central question: how does gender appear in and affect the experiences and “life chances” of individuals in different social locations at different points in time? To address this question, we will move beyond examining gender in merely descriptive terms and toward developing analytical and theoretical understandings of gender.

PERSONAL NOTE

I wish to provide an open learning environment. I also wish to foster social and intellectual maturity through individual struggle with unfamiliar ideas. We must recognize that our views and convictions may be challenged, but we should expect this challenge to take place in a climate of tolerance and mutual respect.

COURSE CONTENT

We will focus on diverse empirical domains, from the bedroom to the boardroom. Since no single conceptual perspective or theoretical position can adequately account for the complexity of the social organization of gender, we will focus on both classical and contemporary theoretical approaches to the study of gender in light of empirical research, case studies, and current events. The course is divided into six major sections:

Section 1: We will begin by establishing some common background on various ways to conceptualize gender. We will ask: What is gender? How do we know it when we see it? What is the role of biology, physiology, and anatomy in the social construction of gender? And finally, can we think of gender in something other than dichotomous terms? We begin with these types of questions in order to set the stage for talking about gender as a uniquely social phenomena, one central to social organization and amenable to systematic empirical inquiry.

Section II: Once this conceptual work is accomplished, we will examine how gender operates at the interactional level. In particular, we will focus on gender socialization, identity acquisition, and face-to-face interaction in a variety of types of relationships and settings.

Section III: Our discussions of gender at the interactional level of analysis will lead us into cultural analyses of gender. We will analyze select features of social life, such as language, sexuality, and the media in an effort to understand the origins and consequences of meanings attached to gender in “real life” and public discourse. At this point, we will ask: how do societies construct maleness and femaleness, masculinity and femininity, etc.? And with what consequences(s)?

Section IV: We will draw on our understanding of the ways in which culture and gender interface to examine if and how societal institutions are “gendered.” By focusing on the family and household labor, work and occupations, and education in particular, we will investigate the degree to which institutions constrain and facilitate the experiences of girls and boys and men and women in different and consequential ways.

Section V: Courses that focus on gender, such as this one, have a tendency to reveal systematic gender inequality and thus assert either implicitly or explicitly that girls and women are victims and only victims. But as Andersen and Hill-Collins (1994:xv) point out, “people are not just victims; they are creative and visionary. As a result, people organize to resist oppression and to make liberating social changes. In fact, oppression generates resistance.” With this in mind, in the second to the last section of the course we will draw on what we’ve learned to look at “Social change and the Politics of Empowerment,” especially that generated by social movements, community activism, and electoral politics.

Section VI: The final section of the course will be devoted to critiques and reconsideration. To conclude the course, we’ll ask: where have we been, what have we learned, what remains to be known and explained, and where do we go from here?

ATTENDANCE:

You’ll find a high correlation between attendance and class grade! In-class exercises and pop quizzes are part of your grade. Therefore, good attendance is a necessity.

IF YOU HAVE MORE THAN THREE (3) UNEXCUSED ABSENCES, YOU WILL BE DROPPED FROM THIS CLASS WITH AN F. An excused absence is an illness with positive proof of being ill (a doctor's written excuse specifying exactly which days you were unable to attend), or the illness of a minor child for which you have a doctor's note, or written proof of other emergency such as an official university excuse.

EXAMS AND GRADING

QUIZZES /ASSIGNMENTS: I will give quizzes (or written assignments) throughout the semester worth 10 points each. I'll most likely give 11 or 12 and will drop the lowest one (or two if I've given 12). This will result in another grade worth 100 points.

There will be 3 exams. (each worth 100 points). These exams will be comprised of both multiple choice and essay.

You will not be permitted to make-up missed quizzes. This is why I will give "at least" one extra quiz (and maybe two) so that you can miss at least one without being penalized. The quizzes not only help to prepare you for the exams, but they also serve as an enticement to come to class.

The following is the basis for your grade:

quiz grades	100 points
Exams (3)	300 points
TOTAL	400 (divide by 4 for grade)

Grades will be determined by the following scale:

A = 90-100

B = 80-89

C = 70-79

D = 60-69

F = below 60

EXAMS	GRADING/POINTS	Dates
Exam 1	100 points	Feb. 1st
Exam 2	100 points	Mar. 13th
Exam 3	100 points	May 10th, 3:30
Quizzes	100 points	Pop/random
