Course Description

This course introduces students to the four basic areas of marketing: product, price, place, and promotions. You will also be exposed to consumer behavior and strategic marketing issues. This course provides students with a basic coverage of marketing theories, models, and tools. The goal of this course is to build a basic framework to enable students to evaluate, describe, and design marketing activities with practical insights into the real world. By the end of the course, students will have a solid understanding of the major decision areas under marketing responsibility, the basic inter-relationships of those decision areas, and an appreciation of how to apply key frameworks and tools for analyzing customers, competition, and marketing strengths and weaknesses. In combination, the course should help students to develop insight into the creative selection of target markets and blending decisions related to product, price, promotion, and place (i.e., the marketing mix) to meet the needs of a target market. In addition to course slides, textbook chapters, and academic journal articles, you are encouraged to read relevant news about marketing and business from the Wall Street Journal, Financial Times, and The Economist.
